

THE DISCREET PEOPLE SEARCH

For sometime, you have been uncomfortable at the job. A co-worker on the night shift strikes you as odd. At times, he totally he freaks you out. Reporting the situation to the law or management may be somewhat overboard at this point, yet you are still concerned. You recently heard of the people search that can be performed online. Though very interested, you are worried about the background search getting back to you, or even worse, the shady individual are researching. Is there actually a way to be discreet when finding out information about people? Yes, you can certainly conduct a background check and people search discreetly. Let's first discuss how public records are accessed to find people.

When looking to conduct a people search, one must first understand the definition of private and public records. Personal files containing social security numbers, birth dates, medical and financial information is considered private and not intended to be accessible during your people search.

From public records, people searches can be performed all over the web, both free and fee based. Finding out almost anything about anyone can be done on your basic browser via a typical search engine. Below are six methods that work as great people finders, helping you to be discreet with the search, while providing quality information at the same time.

JOT IT DOWN

Document every available fact about the person you are looking to find. This includes previous addresses, schools, names of relatives, nicknames, a profession, and any other personal information that may be relevant to the individual. This information will certainly aid when seeking to conduct a people search in a search engine.

WHITE PAGES

The white pages are one of the first people searches you should conduct online. This free service is very reputable with its ability to search public records within all 50 states and most cities. You can also search strictly by last name, which may help find relatives of the actual person you are seeking.

REVERSE SEARCHES

In the instance where you have a phone number or address for a person, you can perform a reverse people search. You can perform the people search for free through a search engine, but many companies offer this service online and provide you with more robust details.

MUTUAL ASSOCIATES

Contacting a mutual associate who also has ties with the person you are looking for is a good idea. Whether it is a friendship or colleague, this could certainly help. They just may have the missing information you need to perform an effective people search.

SOCIAL NETWORKS

Accessing popular social networks is perhaps the most underrated method of finding people. Individuals are frequently posting personal information about themselves on various websites. This includes photos, current jobs, professional backgrounds, aliases and much more. Some of the most commonly used social networks to find people are Myspace, Facebook and Crushspot.

PUBLIC RECORDS

When all other sources have been exhausted, there is always the benefit of public records. These public records are now available online and include registered sex offenders and other individuals in your community.

IN CONCLUSION

If you are looking to shell out money, there are services that can provide you with a plethora of detailed information for your people search. You can conduct the people search yourself, and although you will not obtain as much information as a paid search, it is still effective nonetheless. With a bit of time and creative effort, you can find out information through your people search, either protecting you from a crazy co-worker or connecting you with your high school sweetheart.

